THE HAND OF EARTH.

It's calling I am at the dawn of the day,

To my brother that's over the sea;

But its little I care for my life anywhere,

For it's breaking my heart will be.

But a treasure I take for old Ireland's sake,

That I'll prize all belonging to me.

It's a hand of earth from the land of my birth,

From the heart of the land that I love.

And won't the poor lad in his exile be glad,

When he sees the brave present I bring?

And won't there be sorrow from this treasure of ours

In the heart of the land that I love?

Och, Erin Machree! the lad's parting we be,

His blessing I leave on your shore,

And your mountains and streams I will see in my dreams,

Till I cross to my country once more.

Select Miscellany.

Miles Williams.

Some forty years ago, when Sandusky, Ohio, was a small town, the following singular events occurred there. A young man named Miles Williams, who had come to the neighborhood to look for a place to locate, ventured into Sandusky one afternoon, with a rifle on his shoulder and going to the wharf, inquired of the captain of a schooner when he was going to sail.

"I don't know, exactly," said the captain; "there is a storm blowing on the lake, and it looks to me as if it was going to lead off a dance for a good many flirts' ones, and I don't believe in putting' out such company—it corrupts good manners, as the saying is. You seem to be in a hurry, however."

"I am, I got ill news from home this morning, and I will double my passage-money, if you run me down to Cleveland to-night."

"No! I wouldn't undertake it for four times the money."

Silenced by this reply, the young man went to a hotel near by, and sitting down, thrust his hands into his pockets, with the dogged air of one who makes up his mind to do something with a positive will. He had been sitting with look of gloomy discontent for a short time, when the clatter of horses' feet were heard in the street, and a man, pale and trembling, stood within the door-way. His first discordant utterance was the word "Murder!" No expression of pain or terror can send the same deadly chill to the heart as that one word of terrible surprise, and paralyzed with stupefied interest, the gathered crowd inquiringly gazed at the breathless messenger of evil. Before he could relate what seemed to check his utterance, the sheriff of the county hastily entered and arrested Miles Williams.

"For what?" faltered the young man.

"The murder of Miles Woods," was the stern reply.

Miles was known to every man, woman and child in Sandusky. She was the only child of respectable parents living within a mile of the village, and in her sprightly loveliness had won the affection of all. The circumstances attending her death were as follows: The parents, as was frequently their custom, left the house under the charge of Miles, and had been the greater part of the day, making purchases and visiting in the village. Hurrying home before the threatened storm, the agonized parents found their house robbed, and their only child brutally murdered. The news spread rapidly, and soon the curious and cooler neighbors were looking carefully on all marks the violence had left in the premises. The front door was found open, all the inner doors unlocked or broken, every drawer, chest press or cupboard forced, and their contents scattered over the floor. In the garret, to which place the poor little creature had probably fled, Miles was found covered with blood that flowed from a stab in her side, her little hand, grasping an old bed post, while around her neck a white handkerchief was slightly knotted.

Upon the floor of the hall, one of the neighbors picked up a squirrel with one fore-paw gone, and that's just it. He never committed the murder! It was I who killed Miles Woods—I chased her to the garret and killed her. I was there robbing the house when Williams came along. I heard him speak cheerily to the child, give her the squirrel and then leave. A minute after she was a dead baby, and he had the blame."

"Lord, have mercy on me!" groined the divines, in an agony of spirit.

"I slipped the gold pieces in his pocket. How he prayed and begged for mercy! It's

The Castalian Fount.

THE RAIN.

Like a gentle joy descending,

To the earth a glory lending,

Come the pleasant rain!

Fresher now the flowers are growing,

Fresher now the winds are blowing,

Swifter now the streams are flowing,

Gladly waxes the grain.

Greens and forest, field and meadow,

Bathing in the crystal fountain,

Drinking in the inspiration,

Offer up a glad oblation:

All around, about, above us,

Things we love and things that love us,

Bless the gentle rain.

Children's voices now are ringing,

Some are shouting, some are singing,

On the way to school;

And the beaming eye shines brighter,

And the bounding pulse beats lighter,

As the little feet grow whiter,

Paddling in the pool;

O the rain! it is a blessing,

Sweeter than the sun's caressing,

Softer, gentler—yes, in seeming,

Gladder than the sunlight gleaming,

To the children's glad, singing,

With the voices clear and ringing,

Going to the school.

Beautiful, and still, and holy,

Like the spirit of the Holy,

Come the quiet rain!

'Tis a fount of joy, distilling,

And the lyre of joy is trilling,

With a music low and thrilling,

Swelling to the strain.

Nature opens wide her bosom,

Bursting buds begin to blossom,

To her young 'mid 'tis stealing,

All the springs of life unsealing:

Singing stream and rushing river,

Drink it in and praise the Giver

Of the blessed rain.

Let the clouds be slowly parting,

Sudden the gleams of light are darting

Through the falling rain;

Bluer now the sky is beaming,

Softer now the light is streaming,

With its shining fingers gleaming

'Mid the golden grain;

Greener now the grass is springing,

Sweeter now the birds are singing,

Clearer now the about is ringing,
